

This is “Acknowledgements”, article 2 from the book Introduction to Chemistry: General, Organic, and Biological \(index.html\) (v. 1.0).

This book is licensed under a Creative Commons by-nc-sa 3.0 license. See the license for more details, but that basically means you can share this book as long as you credit the author (but see below), don't make money from it, and do make it available to everyone else under the same terms.

This content was accessible as of December 29, 2012, and it was downloaded then by Andy Schmitz (<http://lardbucket.org>) in an effort to preserve the availability of this book.

Normally, the author and publisher would be credited here. However, the publisher has asked for the customary Creative Commons attribution to the original publisher, authors, title, and book URI to be removed. Additionally, per the publisher's request, their name has been removed in some passages. More information is available on this project's attribution page.

For more information on the source of this book, or why it is available for free, please see the project's home page (<http://2012books.lardbucket.org/>). You can browse or download additional books there.

Acknowledgements

How this book found its publisher is an unusual story. One of the authors was meeting with a sales representative of another publishing company. In the course of that conversation, it was discovered that these two people had a mutual friend—a person who had encouraged the author to publish his first academic book about a dozen years back when this friend was working for another publisher. The sales representative passed along to the mutual friend that they (the author and the sales rep) had met. That resulted in an e-mail reunion between the author and his old friend, who let it be known that she now works for a textbook publishing company called Unnamed Publisher. “Gee, would the company be interested in a one-semester general, organic, and biochemistry text?” was the flippant response. Wrong—or right, depending on your perspective—comment to make! Within an hour (no joke), the editorial director of the company was on the phone with the author, discussing the project and its possibilities. That talk led to a discussion between all the authors on the team, a visit by the editorial director to the first author’s hometown, and the subsequent signing of a contract for the book to be published by Unnamed Publisher. So the initial thanks must go to Jen Welchans of Unnamed Publisher for being the right person at the right place and the right time. You never know when old friends will meet again and make good things happen. Thanks, Jen.

Thanks to Michael Boezi, the editorial director of Unnamed Publisher, who always gave enthusiastic support to this project (and still does). Thanks also to Jenn Yee, project manager, who deftly dealt with 3 authors, 20 chapters, multiple reviews, production issues, illustrations, and photos—and seemed to keep it all straight. Kudos to the technology team at Unnamed Publisher, who had the ultimate job of getting this book out: Brian Brennan, David Link, Christopher Loncar, Jessica Carey, Jon Gottfried, Jon Williams, Katie Damo, Keith Avery, Mike Shnaydman, Po Ki Chui, and Ryan Lowe. We would also like to thank the production team at Scribe, Inc., including Stacy Claxton, Chrissy Chimi, Melissa Tarrao, and Kevin McDermott. This book would not exist without these people.

This project has benefited tremendously from the feedback of reviewers at several stages in its development. We thank the following people for their input:

- David Bailey, Emporia State University
- Michael Bissell, Ohio State University
- Stephen Milczanowski, Florida State College at Jacksonville
- Pamela Strong, Quincy College

Acknowledgements

- Susan Cordova, Central New Mexico Community College
- Ilene Diamond, Central New Mexico Community College
- Margaret Kimble, Indiana University–Purdue University at Fort Wayne
- Chris Massone, Molloy College
- P. J. Ball, Northern Kentucky University
- Booker Juma, Fayetteville State University
- Elizabeth Ferguson, University of Kentucky
- Brad Sieve, Northern Kentucky University
- Deborah Heyl-Clegg, Eastern Michigan University
- Karen Ericson, Indiana University–Purdue University at Fort Wayne
- Maria Vogt, Bloomfield College
- Ellafe Cockcroft, Miami Dade College
- Rebecca Barlag, Ohio University
- Bidisha Bose-Basu, Fayetteville State University
- Ken Johnson, Husson University
- E. J. Behrman, Ohio State University
- Julie Larson, Bemidji State University
- Kenneth French, Blinn College
- Grace Lasker, Lake Washington Technical College

Thanks especially to ANSR Source, who performed accuracy checks on various parts of the text. Should any inaccuracies remain, they are the responsibility of the authors. We hope that readers will let us know if they find any; one of the beauties of the Flat World process is the ability to update the textbook quickly, so that it will be an even better book tomorrow.

On a more personal level: RJS would like to thank her colleagues at Southern Adventist University and her family and friends for their help and encouragement during her work on this book. She is especially indebted to her sons, Michael and Chris, for their patience and encouragement. JWH owes a special thanks to his wonderful spouse, Ina, for doing so many things that allow him time to concentrate on writing. Most of all, he is grateful for her boundless patience, unflagging support, understanding, and enduring love. He is also grateful to his beloved daughter, Cindy, for her help with the house and the yard and so many other things. DWB thanks his wife, Gail, for things too numerous to mention but in particular the constant support of and appreciation for the vagaries of an academic life and for being the single parent on those nights when professional obligations keep him out later than normal. Thanks also to his sons, Stuart and Casey—the proverbial causes of gray hair—for being two of the (many) things worth living and writing for.

DWB

Acknowledgements

JWH

RJS

February 2011